Six programmes
(2) Too much information
"We're just never going to catch up," writes David Weinberger in Everything Is Miscellaneous. That is, we're never going to catch up with the flood of information that is thrown at us by modern technology, especially the internet. We can never get all of our email filed, our digital pictures labelled, our calendars updated, our computers organised. Is the problem too much information, or out-of-date expectations about how information should be organised? Ken and John try to make sense of the flood of information with author and philosopher David Weinberger (Ben Manilla Productions)
