This is the last in the trilogy of Camp A Low Hums. This little music festival has received worldwide attention, being named in Lonely Planet as one of the top Australasian events over summer. Organiser Ian Jorgenson- aka Blink- says it's "the only festival that cares about how talented a band is, not how popular they are". A campground set in a massive 240 hectares of native bush sets the scene for three days and nights of music, parties, renegade shows, old school games, a talent quest, and surprises. The Music 101 team will be in the thick of it, talking to band and audience members, and taking in performances
