7:06 The Elements: Caesium

Justin Rowlatt looks at the element behind the atomic clock. Humanity has always measured time by the rotation of the earth, with the sun at high noon. Yet the birth of atomic time has introduced an inconsistency into timekeeping. In order to solve this problem, from 2015, the link to the sun is likely to be discarded for the first time ever in human history, with implications for everything from satellites to astronomy and from high speed financial trading to the Greenwich Meridian (BBC)

7:30 Spectrum

People, places and events in NZ (RNZ)
spectrum@radionz.co.nz

8:13 Windows on the World
