strong style="mso-bidi-font-weight:normal">The Salon (BBC)

Everything is up for discussion in the salon, where intimate and frank conversations take place between a woman and her hairstylist. Whether you view a haircut as a luxury or a necessity, a hair salon is at the frontline of how we think about female identity. Six journalists from around the world pay visits to salons across the world, from Tokyo to Johannesburg to Beirut and back. We'll hear how women view issues of race, class, wealth, sexuality and beauty through the hair on their heads. Step inside the salon, where every haircut tells a story.

5:00 The World at Five

A roundup of today's news and sport

5:11 Heart and Soul

strong style="mso-bidi-font-weight:normal">Liberating Faith (BBC)

In the days after the attacks on Paris, Mohammed Chirani – a French-Algerian – went on live French TV to tell supporters of so-called Islamic State that Allah would not protect them. "Know that our dead, the innocent French citizens, are in paradise and your dead, the terrorists, are in hell." He was, he went on, "waging war on them with the Koran", challenging the extremists' interpretation of Islam verse by verse.

John Laurenson meets Chirani to learn how he aims to tackle the problem of radicalisation of Muslims in France where it is at its most dangerous: behind the walls of the countries prisons where approximately 50% of France's prison inmates are Muslims. According to Chirani, "prisons are the breeding ground for radicalisation." He aims to combat this with what he calls the "jihad of witness"
