Archbishop Tutu's Ubuntu

When apartheid in South Africa ended in 1994, Archbishop Desmond Tutu preached that the only hope for the country to heal its deep wounds was to turn its back on revenge and retribution and embrace the ancient humanist African philosophy of Ubuntu. He went on to chair the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Now 20 years later, Audrey Brown investigates whether Archbishop Tutu's championing of Ubuntu has helped South Africa to heal and embrace forgiveness in the shadow of the Apartheid regime. (BBC)
