The turban is probably the most obvious thing that identifies a Sikh. After a 1699 edict in 1699 requiring Sikhs not to cut their hair, the turban, part of the Bana or military uniform at that time, was used to keep and protect a Sikh's hair, and in line with its military tradition, it is something that has always been a masculine symbol worn almost exclusively by men and not women. That is until now it seems. This week's edition of Heart and Soul hears from some of the growing number of Sikh women who are wearing Turbans.(BBC) (BBC)
