Reporting Terror

After the string of terrorist attacks in France and Germany over mid- 2016 some journalists are asking if their approach needs to change. Among them the French newspaper Le Monde has pledged to stop publishing photographs of terrorists in an attempt to deny them "posthumous glorification". In our Tuesday feature this week a panel of journalists and editors covering the UK, France, Germany and the Middle East discuss whether media outlets should change the way in which they cover terrorism (BBC)
