The booming business of fertility

The business of making babies is booming, both in the UK and globally, as recent research suggests the world's fertility industry is set to be worth an estimated £15bn by the year 2020. One in six couples in the world are thought to experience fertility problems. There's a huge range of treatments available – from egg donation and specialist 'add-ons' to improve the odds, to egg freezing and surrogacy, not to mention an increasing market for gay and lesbian couples. 6:06 Reversing Parkinson's

Parkinson's Disease is one of the major neurodegenerative conditions. Cells die, for reasons not fully understood, causing a reduction in the production of the neurotransmitter, dopamine, and a raft of physical and behavioural problems. Although effective drug treatments are available, they wear off over time and have side effects. The highly individual nature of the condition and variation in its progression also makes dosage difficult. Sue Broom reports on two new approaches that could lead to treatments for Parkinson's. (BBC)
