The Future of Our Seas

Our fates are tied to the fate of our oceans. But they are under threat from climate change, acidification, pollution, and overfishing. In this roundtable discussion from the University of Auckland, Professors Simon Thrush and Nordin Hasan talk with Dr Rochelle Constantine and Dr Dan Hikuroa about tipping points and the importance of protecting not only marine species which are at risk, but marine ecosystems. Along the way, a story of whale poo in the Southern Ocean suggests the importance of integration to research and action. Dr Maria Armoudian is in the chair.
