Ron Finley: gangsta gardener

When Ron Finley planted food on unused land in Los Angeles, his A simple act of rebellion against a community's lack of access to healthy food sparked an urban revolution. His actions caught the unwanted attention of the city council - but it didn't stop him, and he managed eventually to get a law change. Today his belief that urban gardens build communities has blossomed. His story, and of other unlikely gardeners from impoverished South LA neighbourhoods, is the subject of a documentary Can You Dig This? (RNZ)

Harry Leslie Smith

As a 92-year-old, Harry Leslie Smith's moving speech at a British Labour Party conference about his own impoverished childhood and lack of healthcare became a viral sensation. Smith is a writer, campaigner and WWII RAF veteran. And at 94, he is still producing books and pushing for the preservation of Britain's National Health Service, better care for the poor and for the preservation of democracy. (RNZ)

Pandemic: The Story of the 1918 Flu

Professor John Oxford, one of the world's leading virologists, looks at how the 1918-19 flu pandemic affected every corner of the world. Over 50 million people died in the three outbreaks which hit in 1918 and 1919. It is one of the most devastating pandemics in history and to this day scientists are still trying to pin point its origins in the hope of learning lessons for fighting such catastrophic epidemics in the future. Professor Oxford, present his own hypothesis, gleaned from years of work in the area, on where it may have all begun and how we might prevent it from happening again. (BBC)
