125 years since NZ became the first country to give women the vote, who were the women who signed the petition and changed the world and what's their legacy today? (7)

Education - An exploration of what it meant for young women to 'get an education' in New Zealand (in the late 19th Century) included sitting in class writing down scone recipes by hand, preparing for a life as homemaker. But there were some women who broke the mold, determined to make headway at a time when the institutions said no. Also a look at the kinds of schools available in NZ in the past, rights for women to study at university, and the way our education system even today, teaches kids more about gendered roles than you might think (7 of 8, RNZ)

4:06 The Sunday Feature

AC Grayling Can modern democracy be saved?

In his book Democracy and Its Crisis, Prof AC Grayling of the New College of the Humanities in London investigates why institutions of democracy across the globe are struggling to hold up against the forces they were designed to keep in check. He discusses our contemporary political situation and its historical roots with MP Chris Finlayson in this session recorded at the 2018 NZ Festival Writers and Readers programme.

Hashtag Pray More than half of the British population now say they have no religion. Yet in the Twitter-sphere, faith seems alive and well; hashtags like #PrayforLondon invariably start trending after a terror attack. And when someone dies, they are often addressed on social media as though they were still able to read those messages like "Fly with the angels in the stars. Are people who have turned their backs on organised religion making up their own comforting set of beliefs when it comes to the most difficult things in life, such as death and the loss of loved ones?
